This survey is supported by a rigorous and scientific methodology and is conducted by opinion research institutes which have been scrupulously chosen and are renowned in their countries. All information collected through this survey, as required by ESOMAR International Code of Marketing and Social Research Practice, is handled in strict confidentiality and anonymity. This information can only be analysed globally and never individually. Your answers to the following questions therefore will remain absolutely ANONYMOUS.

There is evidence that part of the population is engaged in undeclared work, by which I mean work that is done legally but not declared to the tax authorities or social security institutions. Payment for this work may be done either with money or in kind and could apply to people working in certain sectors such as construction, transport, agriculture, hotels, restaurants, cafes etc. Undeclared work is also common for a range of household services - gardening, babysitting, elderly care - personal services - hairdressing, cosmetic/medical treatments - or repair services - cars, clothes, computers etc.

There is evidence to show that part of the population accept "undeclared work" – i.e. activities which are not declared to tax authorities or social security institutions - and may knowingly acquire goods or services in this way. In this scenario, both parties – the supplier and the recipient – profit from exchange as they do not pay VAT, income tax or social security contributions.
